Chambers County, Texas Condensed History of Mont Belvieu

The town of Mont Belvieu sits imperially atop a salt dome at the far western end of the Henry Griffith League in the western section of Chambers County. This salt dome in recent years has represented the towns' greatest asset, and also its greatest liability. Due to the threat of explosions and fires on The Hill, many residents have moved. The school system has moved east of town to sites along Farm Road 3180, also known as Eagle Drive. The churches, the post office, and many new homes have been or soon have rebuilt in the same locality. Even today, Mont Belvieu is still a city in transition and continuing to grow.

Under the colonization laws of Coahuila y Texas in 1831, Texas granted a gentleman by the name of Mr. Henry Griffith 4,428.4 acres of land. This land is now where Mont Belvieu is located. Griffith, a native of Pennsylvania, was married in Opelousas, Louisiana in 1824 to Amelia (Barrow) Moody, a sister of other early county settlers.

In 1835, Mr. Griffith sold 1,047 acres of the land that was granted to him to William Duncan. In the original document, which survives even to this day, Mr. Griffith refers to the land as "that tract of land known as the big hill but hereafter to be called Mont Bellview." After Mr. Duncan passed away, the land was divided among his three children.

One son, Meredith Duncan, in turn sold his parcel, amounting to 349 acres to Hugh Jackson in 1840. Then nine years later, 100 acres of this tract was sold by Jackson to Amos Barber and it was there that Amos built his double-pen, dogtrot cabin and began his family.

Barbers Hill Salt Dome

The first tangible evidence of oil in the Barbers Hill area came in 1889 when Elmer Watson Barber encountered inflammable gas while digging a 65-foot water well near his home. Geologist George M. Bevier wrote of the site in 1925:

"Barbers Hill is a mound like elevation in the extreme northwestern portion of Chambers County, Texas, 26 miles northeast of Houston. It is oval in shape, covers an area of 1,718 acres, and rises 45 feet above the surrounding prairie. This elevation is the result of an intrusive salt plug which has raised the surface above the normal position."

Upon the discovery of oil in neighboring Jefferson County in 1901, the first oil and gas leases on "The Hill" were recorded in February 1902. However, only traces of oil were found in the numerous drilling attempts made between 1902 and 1915. Once again, in 1916, Mr. Bevier wrote:

"The Gulf Production Company, successors to the Guffey interest, jointly with the Humble Oil and Refining Company, drilled four wells, all of which are located on the Chambers County Agricultural Association's land near the southern slope of the hill. The fourth well obtained the first production at Barber's Hill, estimated at 40 barrels per day, from a sandy formation at 1,571 feet. The oil was reported as dark brown in color, heavy and vicious. The well was abandoned when salt water appeared after the production of a small quantity of oil."

In 1918, Mr. Sam Hindman organized the United Petroleum Company and completed Fisher No. 1, on September 14, 1918. The initial production was 70 barrels per day, and the well continued to produce for a period of fifteen months. This was the first successful completion in sixteen years of drilling.

Drilling again ground to a standstill until 1926, when two other companies jointly drilled the A.E. Barber No. 1 through the northwestern flanks of the dome. The discovery well produced 500 barrels a day. In the latter part of 1926, the two companies drilled on the northeast flank of the dome. The main feature of this well was the discovery of a 43-foot Miocene pay sand. With this discovery, a frantic leasing campaign began among the major companies in the area.

Then it happened! In 1929, the Republic Production Company discovered Oligocene production on the southeastern flank. From a total depth of 5,914 feet, oil flowed at an estimated 3,420 barrels per day. A second significant well came in that same year when the Yount-Lee Company struck Oligocene pay sand on the south flank of the dome at a total depth of 5,318 feet. Out of the 77 wells drilled to the deep sand on these flanks, 71 of them were producers. By September of 1929, the Barbers Hill field had an average daily production of 20,000 barrels of oil, second only to Jefferson County's Spindletop Gushers.

In 1955, Warren Petroleum Company built an underground Salt Dome storage terminal in Mont Belvieu. The terminal contains 26 underground caverns with a total storage capacity of forty-three million barrels of propane, butane, ethane, natural gas and other products extracted from natural gas liquids. The Warren Petroleum Storage Facility is the largest such facility for natural gas liquids in North America. About three dozen other companies operate similar facilities in the area.

MONT BELVIEU, TEXAS. Mont Belvieu is at the intersection of State Highway 146 and Farm Road 1942, slightly north of Interstate Highway 10 and thirty-two miles east of Houston on a salt dome in northwestern Chambers County. The area's first permanent settler was Amos Barber,<sup>qv</sup> who built the first home on the hill in 1849. The community that grew up near the Barber homestead was known as Barbers Hill. Seeking to avoid confusion with other offices with similar names, postal authorities suggested a change to Mont Belvieu. In 1890 the Mont Belvieu post office opened with Z. T. Winfree as postmaster. In 1920 the population was estimated at only twenty. The first commercial production at the Barbers Hill oilfield had begun in 1918, and the Goose Creek and Dayton Railroad was completed through Mont Belvieu the following year. The townsite plat was filed in May 1922 by Marion, Amanda, J. W., and Daisy Williams. A cotton gin operated at Mont Belvieu from 1924 to 1935. The most important development was the discovery of more oil at greater depths during the late 1920s. Several Work Projects Administration<sup>qv</sup> projects were credited with helping the community weather the Great Depression,<sup>qv</sup> although a weekly newspaper, the Mont Belvieu Citizen, was closed after a brief run in 1932. By the mid-1930s thirty businesses served the growing oil town, which had an estimated 500 residents by the 1940s. Mont Belvieu had incorporated by 1970, when it was credited with a population of 1,144. By 1980 the figure had increased to 1,730. The community was by then closely tied to the Houston-Baytown area. The growth of local industries had, however, proved a mixed blessing. A 1985 explosion at one of the plants threatened the entire salt dome, which had in recent years been used to store liquid propane gas, and led to a series of efforts by townspeople to force the petrochemical industries to buy out the homes in the immediate vicinity of their plants. By 1990 some 200 families had been bought out by a dozen petrochemical corporations. With the aid of these local industries the community was rebuilt two miles east of its 1985 location. Among the buildings at the new site were a city hall, seven new churches, and a public school. In 1990 the rebuilt community recorded 1,323 inhabitants.

Protecting Their Neighbors - Mutual Aid Mont Belvieu

By Kerry Liles,
American Industrial Magazine

(click on any picture for a larger view)

The residents of western Chambers County can rest assured that local industry has their best interest at heart with the availability and commitment of the Mutual Aid Mont Belvieu (MAMB) organization.

Dedicated to providing emergency response assistance during a time of disaster or emergency, MAMB is an organization made up of industry, public safety officials, and local government leaders committed to ensuring the safety of their community. The organization dedicates emergency response manpower and equipment from each facility in a co-op approach to an emergency or disaster. All members receive the highest level of training available at industrial fire and emergency response schools around the country.

In October of 2001, just after the attack on America, MAMB conducted its annual emergency response drill that is required by the Texas Railroad Commission. The purpose of the drill is to test the level of preparedness to protect the local community in the case of an emergency. This particular drill however would be different. With the images of 9/11 fresh in their minds, the MAMB organization conducted a worst-case scenario drill involving three different disasters at one time. It was the largest industrial drill of its kind at the time, indicating the advanced and innovative approach to safety that sets MAMB apart from other mutual aid organizations. See the online video coverage and "A Message Regarding Your Safety" from the member companies of MAMB at www.AIMWebcast.com.

The MAMB organization has also invested in a computerized emergency notification system for the surrounding communities. The system notifies residence of emergencies via telephone and radio messages, and also informs the community of what precautions to take.

The members of Mutual Aid Mont Belvieu are volunteers. These same volunteers are the friends and neighbors that live next door, coach the little league team, and that you see at church on Sunday. They are part of the fabric that makes up a great community, and they will be the first ones on the scene of an emergency. The primary objective of the industrial members of MAMB is the prevention of conditions and situations within their respective facility that could result in disasters or emergencies.

The MAMB organization is prepared and stands in a "state of readiness" to respond and lend mitigation assistance in protecting their neighbors.
